

A digital signal processing system, including an analog-to-digital converter adapted to provide at least n-bit samples to a processor, and range selection circuitry for stepwise adjusting the range of the analog-to-digital converter to the amplitude of an input signal and for shifting the position of the n-bit samples on the processor bus according to the selected range.